

Analytical Essay Writing - Do's and Don'ts

An essay has numerous types with each type having its own structure, intended audiences, and content requirements. One of the most assigned tasks in any subject within schools, colleges, and universities is essay writing.

An analytical essay is a piece of academic writing in which another piece of academic writing is analyzed. This essay consists of arguments or claims regarding the text being analyzed. For instance, analyzing how another author has addressed a certain theme, or how some story has been developed, etc. the purpose is not to persuade readers rather just to present an analysis or opinion about the text being analyzed and get an essay writing service

Just like all other forms of essays this type also includes an introduction paragraph with a thesis statement (the main argument or claim presented at end of this paragraph), a body consisting of 3-5 paragraphs, and a conclusion.

The task of writing this type of essay involves five simple steps that an essay writer must be aware of. the steps are elaborated below:

1. Select an interesting topic
2. Develop a thesis statement
3. Research to find your main points and related pieces of evidence
4. Make outline
5. Bring it all together to write an impressive essay

Topic Selection

Choose a topic that allows room for analysis. Just summarizing is not enough for this type of essay. Avoid selecting a broader topic, the narrower the topic is, the easier it is to analyze it and the more convincing the arguments would be.

Thesis Statement Development

Write such a thesis statement that a reader must be able to comprehend your opinion about the text being analyzed by just reading your thesis sentence. What will be analyzed and how should be clearly mentioned in the thesis statement and have college essay writing service

Searching For Content And Evidences

After finalizing the topic and making a general argument about the essay, now is the time to do comprehensive research about the ideas that will support your main argument in the essay. As a rule of thumb in essays, one idea or supporting argument is presented in one paragraph.

Do not forget to find evidence for each of your claims. A claim without a piece of evidence loses its authenticity and makes the essay ineffective.

Outlining

At this point, as the topic has been finalized, the thesis statement has been developed, claims and supporting pieces of evidence have been sorted out, and made an outline that arranges everything logically with a smooth flow. This process is called outlining in academic writing.

Writing the essay

Now is the time to begin with the task of writing the essay. Put all the information collected so far together. Add background and thesis statements in the introduction, write one paragraph per claim, and end with a strong conclusion and can also get professional essay writing service

Once the components and steps of essays are known, there are certain dos and don'ts that if observed correctly, the students do not need to take help from any write my essay services.

The Dos

- Address all the requirements of the assignment as described by the professor.
- Use argumentation to present your analysis.

- Support all the claims with pieces of evidence.
- Paragraphs must be fully and correctly developed.
- The essay must have a smooth transition between paragraphs. Nothing should look out of place or random.
- The introductory paragraph must end with a strong and clear thesis sentence.
- Each body paragraph must be written on a single idea. This idea must be presented in the start of the paragraph in the form of a topic sentence.
- Use third-person pronouns throughout the essay.
- The structure and organization of the essay must be logical and uniform.

The Don'ts

- Don't let secondary sources dominate the essay.
- Don't use generalizations such as all women think etc.
- Don't provide long summaries or descriptions.
- Do not go beyond the defined word limit.
