The spirit of his father appears to him in a dream and informs him of the causes of his death. He is informed that his uncle King Claudius killed him and hastily married Gertrude, King Hamlet's widow, for him to assume the throne.

Claudius kills King Hamlet by pouring poison in his ear. Hamlet decides to obey his father's spirit by killing King Claudius to get his revenge. He gets into a relationship with Ophelia, Polonius' daughter. She does not find out the truth about Hamlet's mission to avenge his father's death. Hamlet plots a way to determine his uncle's innocence or guilt. He stages a play and in the play, the king is murdered by poison. King Claudius reacts angrily and leaves the place, confirming his guilt.

Note: If academic writing is difficult for you, any essay writer can help. One of the evident issues in the play that affects the modern way of life is spiritualism. Unlike modern society, Hamlet was keen on his spiritualism. He believes in a dream of his father's spirit and embarks on a revenge mission. He exhibits a great sense of belief in the play; he even refuses to kill the King when he had an opportunity because he feared that he might go to heaven.

The modern-day American people do not believe in the kind of spiritualism that he exhibited in those days. His mission for revenge is entirely based on a dream he had. He proves the truth of his dream and begins his revenge mission. In his revenge mission, he ends up killing many other people and loses his life as well.
